Accident victims now will be able to see their crash reports online thanks to a Florida Department of Highway Safety initiative launched Wednesday.

Instead of driving to a police station or the highway patrol office, an accident victim can go to buycrash.com and purchase and download copies of the report.

Buycrash.com is funded by the fees for downloads, according to a written statement.

"Harnessing new technology to enhance customer service and to create efficiencies is in line with the agency's strategy," department Executive Director Julie Jones said in the statement.

The new crash report project is part of a broader effort of Florida's Integrated Report Exchange System.

The Department of Highway Safety expects the program to result in cost savings, according to the statement.
